About the Course

Background

The incidence of inequality in accessing health care services between rural and urban populations is a well-known phenomenon around the world. In many countries, some 80% of rural women have no or limited access to health care.

When we speak of rural women's health, we need to use a holistic approach. We know that women who live in rural areas are not a homogenous group: they represent different ethnicities, cultures, and socio-economic groups, yet we can find common characteristics among them: exposure to poverty, violence, and chronic illness, little or no health insurance; they are more likely to die from heart disease, cancer, alcohol abuse, suicide, cigarette smoking, and obesity.

It is important that health care professionals and all levels of government be aware of these disparities and find ways of reducing these health inequalities in rural women. In the next decades, the international community is set to focus on Universal Health Coverage (UHC) and the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) such as goal number 3 - "Ensure healthy lives and promote well-being for all at all ages". These goals promote access for all to safe, effective, quality and affordable medicines and vaccines. Both of these major global agendas deal with health, including its economic and social aspects. In building and strengthening health services and systems for women in the rural settings, these issues need to be taken into account with regard to Primary Health Care (PHC). This course will focus on challenges in Health Care services, systems, and policies that are prevalent in rural areas, hence affecting rural women.

During the course, we will tackle issues such as scarcity of medical facilities, lack of primary health care, societal and cultural norms, and inadequate policies and funding that often make women reluctant to seek services. Furthermore, we will examine the human resources needed in rural settings to provide the care and support needed by women.

The state of Israel has succeeded in meeting challenges in the field of rural development, due to a combination of innovation, technology, and national commitment, including policies and funding. These topics will be explored through different methods, such as lectures, professional visits and sharing of case studies.

Aims

- To broaden the understanding of the gender gap and inequality in access to health care services for rural women
- To spread awareness and provide tools and skills for creating better health care services, policies, financing, and management of those services
- To view Israel's models for accessing health care services that increase and strengthen the rural health force in rural areas
- To learn what solutions the UN, International Organizations, and Global NGOs are implementing
- To learn about support programs that provide outreach and education

Main Subjects

- Policy making and governmental responsibility for improved health care
- Maternal mortality as an overall indicator of the performance of a health system
- Health Services Access: current initiatives to improve management of health services
- Maternal and Child Health Medical ICT: offering technological solutions for rural women

About MASHAV

MASHAV – Israel’s Agency for International Development Cooperation is dedicated to providing developing countries with the best of Israel’s experience in development and planning. As a member of the family of nations, The State of Israel is committed to fulfilling its responsibility to contribute to the fight against poverty and to the global efforts to achieve sustainable development. MASHAV, representing Israel and its people, focuses its efforts on capacity building, sharing relevant expertise accumulated during Israel’s own development experience to empower governments, communities and individuals to improve their own lives.

MASHAV’s approach is to ensure social, economic, and environmental sustainable development, and is taking an active part in the international community’s process of shaping the 2030 Agenda of Sustainable Development.

MASHAV’s activities focus primarily on areas in which Israel has a competitive advantage, including agriculture and rural development; water resources management; entrepreneurship and innovation; community development; medicine and public health; empowerment of women; and education. Professional programs are based on a “train the trainers” approach to institutional and human capacity building, and are conducted both in Israel and abroad. Project development is supported by the seconding of short and long-term experts, as well as on-site interventions. Since its establishment, MASHAV has promoted the centrality of human resource enrichment and institutional capacity building in the development process, an approach which has attained global consensus.

About MCTC

The Golda Meir Mashav "Carmel" International Training Center (MCTC) was founded by Golda Meir in Haifa in 1961. MCTC was the first of its kind in the domain of women's empowerment, and since its inception has had a profound influence on both individuals and policy making. MCTC endeavors to provide professional women and men from developing countries and transitional societies with the necessary tools for women's empowerment. It aims to enable women to contribute to the socio-economic development processes of their communities and consequently advance their status. To this end, MCTC conducts training activities, both in Israel and overseas, to advance women's participation in public life.

To date, nearly 20,000 women and men from over 140 countries have benefited from hundreds of training activities. Many of them now hold key positions at the local or national level, or within United Nations development agencies.
